Sculptors, art students and collectors, experimented with etching, an eighteenth century technique that has evolved into a modern art form. Many artists, from renowned painters to lesser-known talents, have explored this medium, which involves making prints from a metal plate that has been engraved or chemically treated. The process allows for a range of effects, from delicate line work to bold, expressive scenes. The exhibition catalogue "Artists and Amateurs: Etching in 18th-Century France" by Perrin Stein offers a comprehensive look at the development of etching in France, featuring works by major artists like François Boucher, Jean-Baptiste Greuze, and Jean-Honoré Fragonard. The catalogue includes an introduction by Steven Nash, as well as high-quality reproductions of key etchings and an overview of the evolution of the technique.
