16.6 million Filipinos who voted for him, seen as a self-described Christian, conservative, and of the people were murdered on the streets, gunned down by police officers and vigilantes, as with his encouragement. Yet he is beloved of the 6 million Filipinos who voted for him, seen as vulgar but honest, an iconoclastic, anti imperial thinker, a man of the people. He was the first president of the Philippines after the Spanish-American War. His foreign policy was one of isolationism, and he pushed for the annexation of the Philippines. His election was a victory for the Filipino people, and he was possibly the last Filipino president who was genuinely beloved by the people. His administration was marked by a number of decisions that have had a lasting impact on the Philippines. He was a tough leader who was willing to make difficult decisions, and he was known for his fiery speeches and his ability to rally the people. He was a charismatic leader who was able to inspire his countrymen, and he left a lasting legacy in the Philippines. His policies and actions have had a significant impact on the country, and he is remembered as one of the greatest leaders in Philippine history. His birthday is celebrated as a national holiday in the Philippines.
