Still plays these blues he loved as a young man. He says he still plays them because of the way they make him feel.

His daughter, Rachel, is a young woman who keeps his secret for him. She understands, and she loves him for who he is, with all of his flaws and all of his beauty. She is the one who helps him through his darkest moments, and she is the one who brings him back to life.

In the end, it is Rachel who help him to see the error of his ways. She shows him that there are other ways to live, and that there is more to life than just playing blues. She shows him that there is a world out there, and that he can be a part of it.

And so the story ends, with Rachel sitting in the driver's seat, as Elvis plays his last song. The world outside the car is a blur, but Rachel can feel the music, and she can feel the heartache, and she can feel the love. And she knows that, even though Elvis is gone, the music will live on, and the love will live on, and the story will never end.
