murder. Using recently discovered police files, Daniken reveals that the Mayan calendar, with its sophisticated mathematical and astronomical calculations, is a direct result of the Mayan's need to keep track of the moon's phases and the sun's movements. The calendar is divided into 260 day periods, each consisting of 20 day units and each ending with a sacred day. The Mayans believed that the death and rebirth of the sun was symbolized by the end of a day period, and that the calendar was a means of predicting future events and understanding the divine order of the universe.

Shocking as it now appears, the Mayans might have had evidence of an extraterrestrial visitation. A key feature of the Mayan calendar is the intercalary year, a day added every 52 years to keep the length of the calendar year in alignment with the solar year. This intercalary day is known as the Xibalba day, which translates to 'place of fear' in Mayan. It is believed that the Xibalba day was a time of remembrance for the Mayans, and that it may have been connected to a celestial event, such as a meteorite impact or a solar flare.

In his book, Daniken uses his knowledge of Mayan astronomy to suggest that the Xibalba day may have been a result of a cosmic event that disrupted the Mayan calendar. He proposes that an extraterrestrial visitation could have caused a disruption in the natural order of the world, leading to a new cycle of the calendar. This would explain why the Mayans chose to add the intercalary day to their calendar system.

Daniken's conclusions are based on the use of cross-cultural evidence from other ancient civilizations, such as the Egyptians and the Sumerians, who also had intercalary days in their calendars. He proposes that these intercalary days were a way of acknowledging the influence of an extraterrestrial presence on the natural world.

In conclusion, Daniken's book presents an intriguing and plausible explanation for the presence of an extraterrestrial visitation in Mayan civilization through the use of intercalary days in their calendar. While his conclusions are speculative and require further evidence, they open up new avenues of research into the relationship between extraterrestrial activity and ancient civilizations.
