It was a cold, blizzard night on the outskirts of town when they first saw him. A man in black clothes, with a hood pulled over his head, was walking through the snow-covered streets. People tried to avoid him, but he walked past them without even noticing them. It was as if he was on a mission.

The blizzard made it difficult to see, but they could tell he was heading towards the old abandoned house on the outskirts of town. The house was empty, but they knew it was haunted. There were rumors of a ghostly figure who roamed the house at night, and they had heard that it was a place of great danger.

Despite the warnings, they decided to investigate. They didn't believe in ghosts, but they couldn't ignore the reports of a man in black who was causing trouble in the area. If he was a real person, they knew they had to stop him before he caused any more harm.

As they approached the house, they could hear strange noises coming from inside. They were hesitant to go in, but they knew they had to if they were going to stop him. With their guns andFlashlights in hand, they cautiously made their way up to the door.

The door was locked, but they were able to force it open with their tools. Inside, they found a room filled with furniture that had been abandoned decades ago. The air was thick with dust and cobwebs. In the corner, they saw a figure sitting on the floor, wrapped in a blanket.

It was the man in black, but it was not the figure they had seen earlier. This one was not as intimidating. He was young, perhaps in his twenties, and he didn't seem to be a threat. They approached him, and he looked up at them with a smile.

"Hello," he said. "I'm glad you're here. I've been waiting for you."
